Whispers from The Brighter World

This type of communication with us would be, for my son, an additional bonus to the contacts we already have by other means.

You know how much everything that comes from a beloved one is precious. That's why we never tire of retelling him of our love and our appreciation for what he does. Make necessary arrangements to send him what relates to him; this would perhaps incite him to take action as we expect him to. Barriers that separate you are fictional. You are both sensible, discreet and embarrassed by a certain type of timidity that one can't perceive from watching you live.

You must both overcome this sort of handicap; it would be for us a great joy to see you together.

Humans put up barriers where there is no need to do so, often concealing their very rich natures.

We are making this last attempt in the hope that sooner or later it will be followed through.
