Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, July 19, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Why do you think you don't deserve the graces you receive? Only we can judge that.

My dear child, perfection does not exist in your world. Tending towards it is already a good process.

Where does merit lie, who can judge? No one. None of you has the ability to judge your brother or sister. You must first look at yourselves, observe yourselves with attention, without weakness, and then draw the necessary conclusions.

If one is honest, one has quite enough to do with oneself before turning to one's neighbours and criticizing them; this attitude is common among you all. Be wary of being in judgement, there is nothing more fearsome than that. The yardstick you utilize will be turned against you. Be in peace, each of you, with your circle; make efforts to rid yourselves of an attitude that can only harm you.

Today we had to revert to this important issue.

In all your conscience, whoever you are, you cannot afford to play the judges; that would backfire on you. Think about it.
