Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, July 20, 2000 – 1:30 a.m.

Rest reassured about these messages, they are your property and the fruit of our special relationship.

All these years, your gifts and your energy have allowed you to receive me and note them down. They are your property for the remainder of your days, and you can use them; that's your right. You have forwarded to my son the ones you deemed would please him.

He's a gentleman; he could not proceed in such a way if he wished to peruse the entirety of those in your possession. He would address you directly, formulating his request in a different way. My dear daughter, don't worry about this issue; the moment has not yet come for them to be taken off you. Let time do its work and decide their future. The day you meet, you will be able to address this question and find the answers that common sense will dictate to you both. The holders of these messages – whom you chose – are committed to you in a kind of code of honour, and they will not deviate from it.

Be in peace and blessed.
