Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, August 2, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

My son cogitates, he may change his plans. He is tempted to make a foray to the south of France on a brief visit; let's wait and see what opportunity comes his way. He is affected by this situation but he cannot change anything; one has to wait for more favourable days.

You too be patient, my daughter, for all the reasons you know. Never lose faith in us, whatever happens. We are watching and we let situations be clarified. Evil must eventually be purged to make way for God's plans. However long these mutations may take, they must come to fruition and reinforce what is good for His creatures. Once and for all, one has to go until the end so that the taboos of this stranglehold, which has weighed on the world for centuries, are finally released.

Freedom of thinking and leading one's spiritual path as one pleases is the best thing that can happen to humankind. The day each individual is respected for their profound aspirations, provided they don't harm their neighbour, will be the beginning of a new era on Earth and a true blessing for humanity.
