Thursday, August 10, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

(Anniversary of François' departure, following his message)

True love, in a couple, should be about forgetting oneself in order to value the other; that is what your François has said so well, and it is what you experienced together.

Divine love is also an exchange: total surrender, absolute trust and unconditional devotion. These three aspects are essential, they form the cornerstone on which a solid and sustainable relationship is built.

When the soul reaches this point of no return, there is no limit to what we can hope for.

The union between Creator and creature is established; there is no need to go back, one has only to advance without trying to truly understand the secrets associated with this commitment.

This capital must be preserved at all costs; it is the dearest possession you could all have. Made of precious stones, it represents your divine legacy.

Be attentive to this personal journey, to the instructions given to you all in the secrecy of your heart.

Each of you alone can decode them – no human being, however close to you, can access this sanctuary – and only you possess the key.

Babuji