Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, September 9, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

You are going through a trying period and we don't want to add to your fatigue. This rest doesn't mean it's all over. Our contacts will resume, as fruitful as they have been so far.

We are happy with the gift M has received from his father. He was a being out of the ordinary; he is making good progress here.

He didn't forget this son who has always made him feel proud and who is now serving us, being chosen for a double mission, humanitarian and spiritual.

He must forge ahead in this direction and make this dual process take on its full dimension – without forgetting the power of words, with which he is especially endowed – with our support and blessings.

Take rest, my daughter, try to find a solution to this rather constraining health problem.
