Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, September 27, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

My dear son, you must make arrangements to lighten your workload. You should look after yourself, listen to us.

The Mission is going through trying times in certain parts of the world; you should not be affected by it too much. There is nothing more you can do. We know it and that's what counts.

A very favourable future is in store for our path. It must follow its course. It cannot be established on a larger scale without a few fractures; it's inevitable.

We watch over you with the greatest attention and could not be closer to you. All those here who love you applaud the results of your work. You give yourself without counting the cost, and our blessings accompany you. When you come join me on the celestial fields, we will embark on another struggle. We will move forward together, Master and disciple united for eternity, vibrant with love in the divine light.

We will make good progress, without my putting a curb on your activities. No longer having this body of flesh, which needs to be taken care of, you will be able to give your all.

May this message comfort you, my son. Such is our wish.

Babuji
