Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, September 30, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Know how to gather the roses of life; they have more than just thorns. It is given to all of you to live privileged moments, sometimes in unexpected circumstances. There are good sides in all humans; apply yourselves to bringing them out in others, thus fostering their manifestation. Many of your fellow human beings do not manage to show their true nature.

They shut themselves away in an attitude or a muteness that cuts them off. By helping them to give their best, their personalities could blossom.

Don't forget that there is something good in each being, and refrain from judging. Rather make excuses for your brother or sister, who struggles to overcome the negative aspects of their person.

It is not always easy to lend a helping hand, but in some cases, let your heart speak rather than your reason.

You are all heading in the same direction, with a greater or lesser heavy handicap; so don't add to the burden of the less fortunate.

Consider yourselves privileged if you have followed a path leading you, in this life, to a form of wisdom that raises you beyond the ordinary. You are not advancing alone; think about all these aspects of life.
