Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, October 10, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Humans consciously use only a small part of their potential. Apart from some gifted beings, more evolved than the average individual, most people correspond to the level of evolution of the Earth in its current cycle. Evolution and regression belong to a system of balancing karmic forces. We will not venture any further into the meanders which would not really enlighten you about the human condition. These laws go beyond the current understanding of incarnate beings who come [to Earth] to do particular work for their evolution. Understanding these great projects is not essential.

A certain kind of knowledge is within the reach of those who really want it. Although it is erroneous in many respects and as it appears at the dawn of this century, it remains an element of reflection on the greatness of the universe. Faced with this complexity, human beings must feel small, but grateful for the attributes granted to them.

Creation as a whole remains a mystery for the most scholarly who believe they have found a rational explanation for everything they have explored so far. They have only lifted a tiny part of the veil. But seeking is not a futile endeavour; only the greatest humility in this area is reasonable.
