Sunday, October 15, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Electrical pollution has been attracting your attention for a long time. It is devastating, and human beings suffer the consequences in their subtle bodies, which reproduce this effect on the physical body.

The Earth is surrounded by a kind of net which seriously harms the exchange of gases. This results in disturbances that affect the whole of the biosphere.

These phenomena are felt all the way down to the infinitely small.

Your energies try to adapt to these turbulences.

Certain regions of the world are more affected than others. The oceans play an important role; they represent an enormous mass of water that neutralizes part of this ambient negativity, but there are limits to this process.

The polarity of the Earth, which is necessary for its equilibrium, is being constantly upset.

New energies will have to be used in the future for the good of the planet and its inhabitants. Cries of alarm have been sounded for years by enlightened researchers, without their pronouncements being followed up.

Only absolute necessity will force decisions to be taken by those countries who hold the greatest power. There remains a distance to go to bring human beings to greater wisdom. The supremacy of money is boundless.

May good decisions be made in time, for the good of humanity.

Babuji