Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, October 19, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

The Venerable has done good work with you, and it's now that the results are becoming evident. Time also does its work in the double aspect of creation, where everything must be born and die to this world. This action is ceaseless and necessary for its equilibrium.

The cycles of nature are edifying on this point; it is enough for you all to observe it. It is a precise mechanism that regulates the various phases. All is immutable in this environment, with the repetition of the seasons and its effects on everything that lives here below.

This work takes place naturally, without fuss, in the greatest discretion.

Allowing for exceptions, people have longer lifespans, but these undergo the same rules: development and ageing.

Certain periods of the year affect the human being more, just like the animal or vegetable kingdoms, which must adapt to the changes.

Maturity generally makes it possible – if that has not already occurred – to become aware of the realities of this world and to seek within oneself that which must continue to exist beyond this perishable physical envelope: the immutable, the divine, this light existing at the heart of the being and which is waiting to reveal itself in all its glory and its beauty.

This is the goal of all incarnations, whether understood or not: such is the project which, sooner or later, must be achieved.
