Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, October 26, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Besides this conquest we've just mentioned, what's more important in your lives?

Everything goes by, everything blends in with the memory of time. Events that seem fundamental to you all today, how will they appear tomorrow? They belong to the landscape where your action takes place. They are for the most part anecdotal. You are the actors playing a role. Your destinies are fulfilled and you move on to something else.

This is how the course of an incarnation evolves. You do what was planned in broad outline, trying to follow the thread as best you can. When this course has been completed, you leave this world and assess your life.

What conclusions are you all going to draw? In your opinion, will you be satisfied? Will you have regrets, remorse?

By seeing it from this angle and considering it as a page in the great book wherein everything is recorded, perhaps you will all make a more accurate assessment.

Every elapsed day can allow you all to make the same assessment. If you know how to look back, you will end up attaching relative importance to events that seemed overwhelming to you, in order to favour what is fundamental.
