Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, November 14, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Your world is filled with temptations. Every moment, they're lying in wait for all of you. It's not easy to resist one's own inclinations.

We all have struggled against ours. Life's apprenticeship is not without mistakes. To some extent, they build the human being, provided they remain within acceptable limits and serve as a lesson.

The being becomes refined little by little and from life to life, until reaching a stage where the soul's appeal becomes urgent. Here begins the quest for the Absolute. By degrees, one meets the aspirations of the Self that urges one to act. How many lives will be necessary to satisfy it?

By admitting their mistakes and trying to remedy them, human beings foster their progress.

This long perspective can be enriching, you are the ones who shape it, who, by your reactions, ensure that your life scenery changes.

You can give it new colours – those of love, of beauty in all its forms, and abnegation – an entire palette, rich and colourful, that will embellish your inner space, giving it strength, a strength that can move the mountains of the spirit.
