Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, November 19, 2000 – 8:00 a.m.

You say that serving us is the biggest joy in your life, you see now that it isn't useless as you thought for a very long time.

Until the end, life is full of surprises. Every human being, whatever their capabilities, serves the divine plan.

There is no need to be a hero; bravery can be exercised at any time, modestly, and without causing a stir. The fact of living and struggling for all sorts of reasons is praiseworthy.

Modest lives that in the eyes of others are without sparkle can be rich in the way they are accomplished.

It is the alchemy that takes place at the level of the heart that can make the difference.

What wonders can be produced deep inside it, this most precious of places!

The most insignificant person can possess hidden treasures that no other human can detect.

Wealth isn't where one generally expects it to be, but you our aspirants have understood that, since your commitment shows you know where true values lie.

Appearances are misleading. Wanting to go beyond the illusion that subjugates this world is the most sensible initiative that can be taken by a human being.
