Whispers from The Brighter World

Yes, you are the link, the mere nothing as you call yourself, that permits us to communicate on this plane of existence with my son. It is a slightly different approach from what he's used to and he appreciates it.

You know, since you have also experienced it, that a written confirmation reassures the human side of the being. What is experienced at the level of the heart, that which you call feeling or inspiration, is more often than not impalpable and difficult to verify. A written message is more edifying, it confirms what is already sensed.

Human beings by nature need to be reassured. Whether they admit it or not, it is their nature that requires it.

They feel fragile in the face of the ups and downs of existence. He or she realizes they are not able to master everything and that, like everyone, they must undergo the consequences of events. They are alone in the face of all sorts of tragedies that inevitably occur: illness, the death of loved ones, all the things that occur in life and that no one can avoid.

Given this perspective, the greatest humility should be the order of the day, for each one of you.
