Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, November 29, 2000 – 8:00 a.m.

My dear son, you are going to receive unexpected help. We cannot leave you indefinitely in difficulties of this kind. You must face a formidable adversary. Remain hopeful of coming through it victorious; we support you in this.

It's about time for your road to clear up and for you to proceed more serenely. Putting in place such a system is not without frictions of all kinds.

We would like that to be reduced to a more acceptable quota.

A new smile will come and delight you. Some unexpected joys will warm your heart. You need it, my dear son. We would like, so often, to be physically close to you.

That the Mission encounters difficulties is unavoidable. They are counterbalanced by very encouraging future prospects. Don't worry about this, these prospects surpass our expectations.

We support you in your endeavours.

Receive our very special blessings; the future will make you understand their deeper meaning.
