Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, December 9, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Don't be sad, consider the Mission as a whole and its progress in the world. The setback in France is due to this anti-sect propaganda orchestrated by political and religious authorities.

It ends up by reaching people's minds: the media regularly apply themselves to propagating false ideas.

This situation is causing a large number of our aspirants to question their choice. It's sad, but that is how it is.

The Christians fought for four centuries before being officially recognized in some countries. Before that they were regarded as a disturbing sect.

You have to give it time and continue what has started so well. We are not a religion, we don't impose dogmatic beliefs or sacred rites.

We teach a method capable of helping humanity grow spiritually without indoctrination. This country no longer reasons according to the legitimate right of its citizens.

Our brothers and sisters must understand where the truth lies, and keep trust in their Master and in a proven method.

They will set off again more confident in their approach, placing the path they have chosen above attacks that have nothing to do with them. They will regain the enthusiasm that in some of them is waning and the motivation to make a fresh start on a path that suits them.

This crisis will not last for ever, the Mission in France will one day come out of it stronger than before.
