Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, December 16, 2000 – 10:30 a.m.

You offered your life to us; we use it, in the noblest sense of the word. We impose on you a strict pace, entirely devoted to service. We fill up your heart with grace; it is a fruitful exchange between yours and ours. A vibratory power results from it, benefitting those who gravitate around you.

Whether they perceive it or not, that is the fact of the matter. Love is the engine of the world. It is capable of sweeping everything away and building it all back up. So rejoice, my child, and don't be afraid anymore, as you are now, to lay yourself bare in front of the faithful hearts that surround you.

What you do, they can do; you draw them in your wake.

One day, they will recognize it and be grateful for the opportunity they had to be around you.

We know your modesty will greatly suffer from these words, but all that had to be said.

Accept them in all humility, like a blessing you receive from us.
