Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, January 11, 2001 – 8:30 a.m.

Is our music* not sufficient for you anymore? Whether serving on Earth or elsewhere, it's the service that counts. Don't you understand it that way anymore?

What else can we say that we haven't said already? We understand your heart's impatience to come and rejoin us, having felt it ourselves intensely. The days that follow one another are like acts of love to be offered according to the disposition of one's heart. See only this aspect of things, offer generously and bring the majority of your actions into line with this way of doing things.

Thus you'll recover your desire to fight, to give the best of yourself, as you do so well.

You play a role that has its importance; do not undervalue it as you do. You have received gifts that many would like to have, even if they don't realize what that implies. There is the other side of the coin – one has to accept the disadvantages.

Regain confidence in yourself. These messages will be appreciated by numerous souls in need. There are more than you imagine who are searching for their path outside religious constraints. The simplicity of our remarks will be able to touch hearts. Do not regard as useless either your interventions or all that relates to you. These messages form a living whole that takes into account the human person. In painting, the greatest of masterpieces is made up of contrasting tones which complement and enhance each other.

That is how it is, my daughter. Regain strength in order to recover your taste for action.

* "There's no longer enough music in me to make life dance." This sentence of Celine had been in my thoughts and my remarks for several days.
