Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, January 19, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Time smoothes out difficulties. It leaves only reasoned feelings – passions, in conflicts of importance, having faded.

My divine Master was not unanimously approved, nor was his humble servant. My son has the same problems, only more developed since the Mission has taken on a certain importance since then; it's in the order of things, as we've already said.

Everything that needs to be done to build our path will be carried out as planned. It takes time to lay solid foundations that will prevail in the future. The human structure, in terms of people in charge, takes time to put in place; this is the most delicate part of the operation. Spiritual fulfilment does not necessarily go hand in hand with qualities required and indispensable for that kind of performance.

The word is not too strong: a mission within a group is no picnic. Friction is inevitable, but it must not hinder the progress of our movement, which has long been destined to provide solid spiritual support for the people of today and tomorrow. So was it decided by the higher authorities.
