Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, January 29, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Don't lose heart; you always overcame difficulties. We can't make the path you have to travel any smoother. We understand your weariness: who would not be tired, in your place? Our contacts illuminate your path, yet it's still no less painful to pursue.

Keep your spirits up, my dear daughter. Think that it will all have an end and that you will find your homeland, when the moment comes. This incarnation on Earth will be mere memories, of which only the best aspects will remain. Most of your life was centred on spirituality. That process nourished, helped and transformed you. Think of what it would have been without this dimension.

You, who know the lives of the most outstanding Saints of Christianity, who have read and tried to deepen your understanding of what the existence of several Indian spiritual Masters was like here below, what did you derive from that? Were they free from the suffering and difficulties reserved for the beings that populate this Earth? No, their lives were profoundly marked by ordeals reserved for human beings.

You must finish what is ongoing and complete the contract.

Keep joy in your heart, in spite of our speech, which does not meet your expectation. We bless you.
