Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, January 30, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

The idea of translating, as of now, a certain number of messages is good. It is preferable to translate finely from the outset. Better to do fewer and do them well. A less elaborate first translation might remain, and that would be regrettable.

We insist on the fact that to peruse them my son will have to personally submit a request to you. Things must be clear on this point.

It is wise to begin these translations, since we have people of goodwill willing to commit themselves in this direction. This is the beginning of a long epic, which will lead to making these messages known.

You define yourself as a 'pencil' in this business, but for the moment these writings represent a personal property, and they are under your protection.

It is up to you to decide what is worth doing. We wanted once again to express ourselves on this issue. Your own life is embodied in this work, which your energy has allowed to be carried out. It therefore rests with you to decide on the modalities for their 'soaring.'

Don't worry: these messages will be known to my son in due time. Even if the prevailing context doesn't favour a meeting between you, we do not despair that it can take place one day. Rest, we will not insist any longer; all is said for the moment.

Do your best, my daughter, according to your heart, and do what feels right for you.
