Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, January 31, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

My son should not be disappointed; what must be, will be.

As regards this Fatehgarh matter, we always come back to the same point: humans are complicated, headstrong and stubborn. With them nothing can ever be simple. To succeed in this project, my son will have to deploy strategic forces and be audacious. Time will iron out difficulties. Everything will take place at the right moment and in the best conditions. Waiting will bring about new elements that will allow this business to be handled differently.

We will come back to the topic after reading my son's letter, which is meant for us. Let his mind be at ease, he doesn't disappoint us. Unfortunately, we were expecting this result. He must not be discouraged; unexpected events will relaunch the project.

The Mission will not lose anything by this delay, quite the contrary.

Dealing with business, even that related to spirituality, is neither easy – far from it – nor free from difficulties.

Here, as elsewhere, nothing can be built without pain.
