Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, February 14, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Believe me, my child, you only utilize part of your gifts. Given your health problems, you cannot afford to dissipate your energies by attending to your fellow beings beyond what you do. Consider that what you are doing for us is of primary importance.

As regards this century of obscurantism, in particular for all that relates to esotericism, a number of beings will have influenced it in various ways: some by helping their sick brothers and sisters, others by showing them a path they were afraid to take, making available to them highly inspired writings that bring them knowledge. True values will reassert themselves in the future. Human beings of this time are missing out on a wealth that would give meaning to their existence, which is impoverished by the material ease that diverts them from the profound realities of life.

One has to go far into excess before returning to normality. It's the same in every field. The middle ground is not easy to find. Certain spiritual paths have made it the principal focus of their philosophy.

Human beings will always find it difficult to adjust to these principles, excess being a human characteristic.
