Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, February 28, 2001 – 9:00 a.m.

In a quarter century, the Earth will experience a major upheaval. That will be the beginning of a very painful cycle for Earthlings to go through. Fire will literally beat down on certain parts of the world whereas torrents of rain will pour over others. Cataclysms will follow one another for many long years, keeping frightened people on edge. Many will turn towards a supreme God beseeching His forgiveness – forgiveness for more and more aberrant behaviours, as well as for the maltreatment imposed on their nourishing mother, the Earth.

Failure to respect the elements will lead to terrifying effects for the population at the end of the century. In future ages, the present configuration of the continents will be shattered. Geographical maps will need revising. Yet the beings inhabiting this planet will have more than enough to do to survive without dealing with those details. The atom will turn against human beings, who will have been unable to harness it, and its lightening power will be devastating. The time of punishment for such a conceit will manifest with all its force, and humans, paying for their ancestors' glaring mistakes, will suffer without having any control over the situation.

The transformation of this planet must go through all these cataclysms in order to be effectively completed.
