Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, March 8, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

The Medium: You are such a poet, Babuji, that my heart melts on rereading you after having written.

My dear daughter, if you have all been nourished by these messages since the beginning, day after day, in every subject covered and aimed at helping you, you have made progress – it is inevitable. Our remarks have penetrated your hearts and have left their mark on them. How could it be otherwise! This is the reason they are given to you. It is up to you all to draw out their substance, to imbibe them. Thus, you have 'everything'. What is your heart lacking? Has your faith developed after this long process? We cannot force your heart. Did our songs make it tender? We have carefully nuanced the messages to please you.

What more can we do? Tell you all that we love you? You know that already. Is your soul won over, does it sing with us, or do you continue on your way, paying more attention to the noises of the Earth, this over-populated world, terrifying in its excesses?

We have all come a long way together, for the better, we hope. You have all our blessings.
