Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, April 9, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

For my son, difficulties will arise from all sides.

In France, minds become heated and are focused on all the spiritual movements they don't know. It's a situation that is taking hold and is likely to last.

The French will wake up one day, wearied of being manipulated and hindered in many aspects of their lives. What is sown in fertile soil cannot be lost. More favourable times will come and the Mission in France will blossom again in this country, having found its true place in it.

These campaigns of calumny are fomented by very powerful dark forces acting in the shadows, in this country as well as everywhere in this world, this country being however their chosen ground.

It will be necessary to show a great deal of patience and to wait for more favourable days. Real faith cannot be lost; it is strengthened in the silence of the hearts and comes to light in due time.

This movement is part of the cycles of life. One must take it as such and not undermine what has started so well in this country, with so much enthusiasm, demonstrating the real need for a spirituality divested of the superfluous.

It will lose nothing by waiting for the right moment before eventually expressing itself freely.
