Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, April 9, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

Don't be concerned regarding the previous message. You can't change the situation right now, nor can we.

That's the way things are; people act like sheep and don't resist skilfully run denunciation campaigns.

Distance yourself, my daughter, many countries of the Earth live much more tragic situations. Persecutions, violence and misery are their daily lot.

This world is doing badly; it is seeking itself through tragedy. Happy people are rare; they make no fuss and live ignored by their peers.

Large countries, on the other hand, are engaged in a sordid competition, which is the source of all evils, and are fomenting dreadful aggressions.

The power of money is destructive: it only generates conflicts of all kinds, and it inflicts misery upon the populations that suffer them.

This collective madness is accelerating; it will have to stop one day.

By which means? Think about it, all of you, and pray, so that this poor Earth, in the grip of negative forces raging thereon, will come to its senses.
