Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, April 11, 2001 – 10:00 a.m.

My daughter, we do not dictate these messages to you word for word; it would be tedious for you as well as for us.

You capture our thoughts very faithfully; you do the best you can, and we appreciate it, believe me. Do you believe we would have continued this work if it were not so?

Rest assured, everything is fine. Some of the topics covered disturb you a little, at the time, but you free yourself from the impressions they create, leaving it to us to express ourselves. We have good reason for choosing the topics we address and try to deal with.

We would like to talk ceaselessly about love, about the beauties of the soul and spiritual joys, but life on Earth is not limited to this. Human beings are grappling with so many contradictory impulses that destabilize them.

We try, through our remarks, to enlighten them and get them to listen to reason. The best of our aspirants, the most convinced, the most balanced, sometimes need a certain discourse to bring them back into behaviour that is more correct. Perfection is not of this world; everyone yearns for it, yet few find it here below. The way to get there is long, hence the role of the Master in human evolution.

The Medium: O Babuji, my heart aspires to withdraw from the world, because 'All is nothing and God is all.'*

It is true; this simple reason should be enough to satisfy the hearts of human beings. But they still need to convince themselves of it and live it within themselves, intensely.

May your efforts be directed towards this goal and give real importance to only this one truth.

Babuji
