Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, April 15, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

A light is emerging on the horizon, which represents hope of a higher life for future times, far from the manipulations of all kinds that human beings are going through. They are advancing, often unable to put into perspective what they are taught. Minds are like sponges, which absorb everything they receive, and if they don't have the common sense to see clearly in all this mass of information that hits them, their life is affected.

Without spirituality, a healthy life and a balanced environment, how can people find their place here below? Life is hard for them, nothing is simple; they must work so that they can live and feed themselves, as well as their families if they have them. How can they cope with all the difficulties that arise during their lives? Observing the struggles, the battles of all sorts that they must wage, one remains astounded by the efforts and the work that they must accomplish to fulfil themselves.

Everything has to be earned on this Earth; what path will they take to reach the goal? Their tendencies, even more than their education, will make them act. How will they behave in the face of the ordeals that life has in store for them? The innate strength that inhabits them will make them react according to their temperaments.

May they use this strength and have the wisdom to behave as honest people. May the Divine manifest itself in them to guide them throughout their existence and make them realize how lucky they are to possess this privileged enlightenment!
