Wednesday, April 18, 2001 – 8:00 a.m.

We appreciate this series: 'Songs of the spirit'. The elements that make it up are well chosen and presented with finesse. The series is like a crystal pearl placed on top of this ensemble of messages, not all of which are cheerful.

They are also suffused – we wish it so for all – with hope for better times, and sufficiently motivating to encourage you in your spiritual journey.

We often focus on what constitutes a handicap in this type of process. We know the traps, the pitfalls, hence our insistence on underlining certain character traits that are specific to humans.

No one is perfect. We'd soon know, as such an exception would be noticed. We have only one goal, only one desire: to help all of you again and again.

How many hearts will be touched by these messages? When can they be made more widely known? We don't know exactly.

They exist, they have their own life, and time will give them their due place.

They are, for now, accessible to a few privileged people. What interest and reactions do they generate in them? After a long journey accompanied by these writings, what is their assessment? That is the question.

We hope, with the same words repeated tirelessly, to have softened hearts and contributed to making them see life in a different light.

Babuji