Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, November 17, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Yes, our comments of yesterday can be extended to racism. There is nothing sadder, in this time when people believe civilisation to be at its highest level, than to see them tearing each other apart for racial differences, and ethnic groups being sacrificed because they disturb. When will we see wisdom reigning on Earth and human beings respecting each other, whatever their skin colour? It is time for an immense mixing to take place and for people from all continents to rub shoulders and get to know each other. An enormous work remains to be done, even if minds have opened up quite a bit compared to the last century. See in the other person your own brother, your own sister; learn to understand their culture, their customs that are not yours. All this must not create barriers. Try to see in them what all of you have in common, what can bring you closer and unite you. Each population has its own treasures; it is up to you all to discover and respect them.

If you can admit all this, you have taken a step towards peace and harmony. It is the mindset that has to change; tolerance and respect for the other must be established to unite all peoples.
