Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, November 21, 1999 – 9:30 a.m.

Are you all fully aware of the brevity of life on Earth? The beings that are dear to you and those you appreciate will leave it one day or another, and perhaps earlier than you imagine. Take advantage of their presence. Appreciate the moments of harmony with them and the qualities they may have, leaving aside their small foibles.

See what is good in each one and help them, if needed, to develop the positive aspects that characterize them. Each individual is one of a kind, in their personality and their genes.

Do not wait until certain beings have disappeared to express your love or your affection to them. So often the living are assailed by such regrets! Try to no longer make this kind of mistake.

My son is arriving in Europe. Once more, he will do important work to help all the countries he visits, and those not visited this time will receive what they need. Physically, he cannot go everywhere; do not however draw any erroneous conclusions from this.

We will leave it at this today; you have taken down this message under difficult conditions.

We will let you rest and take advantage of the treatment you have received.
