Whispers from The Brighter World

Thursday, November 25, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

We're not going to dwell on the differences of social classes, they are necessary. It takes all kinds to make a world. Furthermore, we will not revert to the fact that – for each of you – this relates to a plan concerning your evolution.

Help your brothers and sisters in difficulty as much as you can; all this misery on the planet is insufferable, even if we know the deep reasons for it. The mighty will never stop trying to enrich themselves. Some help their neighbours and the majority continue to sink into a saddening karmic debt. You all know the rules; they are subtle and terrifying in some respects, but just. Sooner or later, one's debts must be paid; it is the rule of the game, and you knew it even before uttering your first cry here below.

For those unfamiliar with this way of seeing, injustice is everywhere. They lash out at their human brothers and sisters, at God in whom they cannot believe, and they suffer, thinking they have been abandoned in this sad breeding ground. Some beggars are illuminated from within and they bless all that moves around them; they thank the Creator, they are sages and you don't know it.
