Friday, November 26, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Yes, my dear child, you can thank God, you shared your life with an ideal companion. He was present and caring towards you through all the trials you faced.

It is an uncommon love that binds you, and you've always considered it a divine grace. Meeting him transformed your life and his too. It is a great day for him here, and you have felt it.

You can rejoice, even if you miss his presence infinitely. He has reached a level of perfection that should make you happy. We wanted to share this happiness with you, knowing that it would give you courage. That he is no longer near you is sometimes painful, but we know your greatness of spirit and we know that this news can only delight you.

You will meet again one day, dazzled by each other's light, stripped of superfluity and beautiful out of true beauty.

Your souls are united forever; they vibrate in unison and nothing can change that. So bear this separation – which is not a separation – without sadness. Courage, my daughter. You are carrying on with your journey; we know your sole and great desire, but the time has not yet come. Just a little more patience and your wishes will be granted.

Babuji