Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, October 25, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Letting go doesn't mean having no will anymore. Simply, in certain circumstances, one should not be obstinate and try absolutely to get what one wants.

That might not be good for you. If a big project is not being achieved, one should see the hand of God in it. You were not supposed to invest yourselves in what you were planning to do. So don't hang on desperately, and be willing to turn the page.

Whether it's the little things in everyday life or the more important issues for your future, what seems best in your eyes is not necessarily desirable for you. Do whatever it takes to obtain a satisfactory outcome, and then be willing to accept the result.

Our views are not necessarily yours. We have to protect you from yourselves and direct you towards what is best, in the broad outlines of your existence. You have your own free will, and you are left with choices, unless they are harmful to your evolution. Whatever may happen to you, always see your destiny being fulfilled.
