Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, April 22, 2002 - 5:00 PM

My dear son,

"It is a long time since we had an exchange by these means. Our scribe is still at her post. Let us take advantage of that. You find refuge in this ashram, away from the city's nuisances, and the weather is convenient to you. It suits you. It is your choice. It is true that this period of the birthday celebration corresponds every year to a new step forward by the Mission in this world. As time goes by, it will grow. Such is its purpose in the future. We are working towards this effect, and you on your side are putting in place an adequate organization so that it meets man's growing needs and demands. Our way corresponds to men of today, and will correspond even more to those of tomorrow. They [the men of tomorrow] will be completely lost in the chaos of those emerging societies. Life will be harder and harder on this Earth, and life will be selective at all levels. One will have to be strong physically and morally as it will be in the offing. Our way will be a possible recourse for hearts in search. We will be able to offer them assistance in a particular area, but which area they will only discover after many setbacks and suffering.

"My dear son, regain your strength to hold your responsibility until the end. We are helping the wise man that you are, cope and strengthen the edifice, which is under construction. It should be strong to resist the upheavals of the times to come. We are always close to you. May our love carry you and warm your heart according to your needs. We thank you, my son, blessed among all, for serving and loving us so well."
