Tuesday, March 25, 2003 - 8:30 AM

Yes, it's true that the main thing is preserved on this Earth and survives the tragedies of this world. On the basis of this principle, all must be relatively short compared to eternity and to myriads of planets where life blossoms. On these planets, life takes forms and aspects that are varied but rich and even very much more advanced on some of them. These worlds show great diversity and related researches would leave man's curiosity breathless.

"The Earth is a transitory thoroughfare, a kind of test paving the way for a varied and enlightening exploration. The spiritually enlightened being leaving this Earth begins a long journey through which his soul will be able to open out and to strengthen itself. His asset will assure him many possibilities enabling him to progress towards the divine source. The quest does not end at this level; it will be just starting in an upper area where restless wanderings are out of place. There, everything is planned, precise and without possible error; the laws being very strict.

"When it is understood and accepted in all its subtlety, our way opens the doors to this universe where the soul can open out in all the splendour it acquired by divine grace. May our candidates really understand it and largely benefit from it, with all our blessings."

Babuji