To you, my chosen son,

"Your road is fraught with pitfalls and sometimes difficult to cope with, given all the drawbacks of a human incarnation. We see beyond these aspects, as you also do in your high spiritual vision. We are satisfied with all the aspects of your tour; it has been fruitful in many respects. It has allowed you to make discoveries, more important than they seem. You know what we are referring to; your discoveries are just beginning concerning new facets of a personality full of resources hitherto unsuspected and whose approach can only appeal to you.

"That is how it is, my dear son. Great men have this privilege: they keep exploring their many capacities acquired by divine grace. You belong to these Greats who will leave on Earth a sacred imprint. Your current dimension enables you to be aware of it and not to be assailed by doubts, which we all experienced in the same circumstances. They are terribly heavy to carry when life weighs on the shoulders of a being seemingly resembling all other men. The level you have reached must release you from such scruples inherent in this heavy responsibility.

"Let us repeat it to you: you should get over all that. Advance towards us in the light that attracts you and prepares you for your future combats. They will be important even after having left this Earth, and their scope will be significant. Having shed your mortal coil you will be able to actually appreciate what your life was on this Earth and to satisfactorily assess it. Our blessings carry you, my dear son, and accompany you always."
