Friday, January 9, 2004 - 10:00 AM

To devote oneself to the Divine, to be its channel in all simplicity and surrender, provides to your life a special attribute, my child: that is what wise hearts do.

"Each one of our brothers has the possibility to serve, using his own competences. The Mission is being built with everybody's contribution. Voluntary work is appreciated. It enlightens him who practises it. There is so much to do everywhere in the world where ashrams are built, and they will be increasingly numerous, requiring the talents of all. This service offered spontaneously and generating a collective awareness shows the commitment of our aspirants to a system in which they believe. The more they progress, the more they feel in themselves the benefits of the spiritual work accomplished under the high authority of the Master. Since the beginning, our way has been distilling in hearts an invaluable leaven. It will not cease to bear its fruits for the good of men, turning more and more to what they regard as their last hope, namely a true spiritual process. Future times will foster this research; they will be very gruelling for humans whatever their financial and even geographical circumstances; nobody will be saved.

"Here we do not want to be bad omens, but only to help our brothers prepare for the inevitable—the manifestations of divine laws. Each one can feel in himself that the world has reached a turning point in its history. A wave of madness is sweeping through it, as a sign that herald changes. May they make man more lucid and conscious of the rules related to an incarnation on this Earth, thus bringing to him some type of wisdom. We are at work towards that."

Babuji