Sunday, March 11, 2001 - 8:00 AM

You must not be afraid of writing what we dictate to you. A world new and totally different from what you are presently living in will exist in the future centuries.

"Establish a parallel between what life was in the eighteenth century and what it is nowadays. Would the most advanced people of those times have imagined what exists now in every field? You consider everything as normal and take it definitely for granted. Similarly, the way to go within the next two centuries will be even more amazing. Therefore, you must note down, without absolutely any reservation, even if you do not understand.

"A new world is in the offing. You cannot imagine it. It is beyond your comprehension. Your current civilization is built on a few principles that will no longer prevail in the future. Electricity, oil and its by-products, which are used in the present system, will be considered as antiques or simply forgotten. A complete revolution will have occurred at every level. If a vestige of your civilization had to remain, it might be studied with curiosity. That is the way it is since the beginning of time. Each thing evolves and is renewed. Men end up going to the most glaring extremes; that must therefore be remedied. Everything changes and is transformed, it is in the nature of things."

Babuji