

Thursday, December 21, 2000 - 8:00 AM

Masters of all times used parables to express themselves. There's none so deaf as those who will not hear, that is also why there are few chosen ones. Not everyone is capable of really understanding what is behind seemingly insignificant words.

"One has yet to know how to hear and, as far as you are concerned, to know how to read. Not only is the heart's openness necessary, but the comprehension of a text is also proportional to the evolution of the reader. We cannot reach levels impervious to knowledge in this reincarnation. A reading, even though superficial, prepares one for future progress. We wish that a great number of the many written messages attain their objective—make of it what you will.

"This century is the start of a new cycle, which will mark humanity. Following many upheavals, the darkness will give way to the light for the largest number of people. All of us here are working to set up the organizations which will be suitable for that distant future, but which already takes shape in golden letters. Call, in your hearts, to this reign of the true faith and of love."

Babuji