

Wednesday, May 21, 2003 - 10:00 AM

In the very heart of silence, there is beauty, that which cannot disappoint you beyond your daily qualms. It exists unadulterated. Being of divine nature, nothing can alter it. Draw from this incomparable source; let your heart drink from it and get stronger, to better face this life, which weighs heavily on you. Keep your spirits up; you have this resource that many do not have. They are searching in vain in this world for what they cannot find therein. Only God can quench their thirst, but they don't know it or fail to make the necessary effort to meet Him.

"In the heart of silence there is peace, which is communicated to the soul, adorned with divine graces, exhorting it to love: this kind of love dedicated to the supreme Master who invests his chosen sons to let them act in His divine name. In the heart of silence, there is life, the divine life, that which does not appear in this world. The most important thing is not visible to men's eyes; it strongly appeals to hearts that are ready to listen. This life carries the heart far from the troubles that prevail here below, generating only dissatisfaction and giving rise to hatred.

"Man hopelessly seeks elsewhere for that which is eternally within him. He gets breathless in struggles where he gets lost, since he does not know his own real nature. Ignoring his only wealth is an unquestionable handicap. Man's heart is so poor when he has not found the favourable outcome capable of embellishing his life. We extend our blessings to all our brothers. May they reach their goal."

Babuji