Whispers from The Brighter World

Monday, November 10, 2003 - 10:00 AM

If man knew what he was capable of, he would be very much amazed. All this knowledge remains unknown to him; his bases are not solid enough to assume powers, which he is not able to manage properly. Very advanced civilizations were lost lamentably, because they did not exploit very refined perceptions as advised. All will be given again to him when he has reached a sufficient level of evolution to make good use of it. For that, he will have to undergo the ordeal of fire, purifying and liberating him from his bad instincts. It is the status of the whole humanity which must be modified; it will need to be expurgated from the evil maintaining it at the level where it has been stagnating since many centuries without things being changed. Many souls are on their way and aspire to rise, always more. To separate the wheat from the chaff will not be an easy thing.

"Unspeakable upheavals will have to take place to clean up this world, over a rather long time, allowing the emergence of the chosen race capable of establishing a new world corresponding to the foreseen standards. The prevailing obscurantism cannot last forever. The beginnings of these big changes are being felt, from now on. Many human beings can feel it and are preparing inwardly, through an appropriate approach that can help them. They are looking for the right way, that which is suitable for them and seems to meet their aspirations. This need will keep growing. A new race is in action, open to the truth and in phase with a reality, which will prevail for the multitude that will be able to adapt to new times.

"May our brothers progress with long strides and adjust themselves to new vibratory currents which are already in action towards a complete regeneration of humanity, by divine will."
