Tuesday, August 17, 2004 - 10:00 AM

You are at the heart of these messages, my child, and your states of soul inspire them as time goes by. You are living in this world and we adjust our remarks to what our aspirants can feel at different moments of their Earthly existence. All of them, inevitably, go through the same range of feelings, which influence them more particularly at some points in time, both through joy and pain. It is precisely this diversity that shapes them and which, depending on their philosophy, can make them grow and progress in wisdom. No one can escape the vagaries of an incarnation; each one of them is important, it puts a being in the best conditions, so that his experience is positive.

"How will the life be led? Which reminiscences of past lives will interfere with this one and are likely to influence it? Anyway, life is the best school, and until the end it will be providing lessons from which a wise man can benefit. A spiritual process helps to put things into perspective, to try not to repeat the same mistakes, to forgive, to understand in the others what is different, and even shocking in them. Diversity is inherent in this world; it constitutes the major feature of it.

"All of our brothers illustrate this comment perfectly: although they are all going spiritually in the same direction, they display obvious differences in other respects. This feature is peculiar to humanity. Where would challenge lie if uniformity and simplicity prevailed in this world, as well as peace and harmony!

"It has not yet reached that stage; working in this direction is our goal, we are applying ourselves to that."

Babuji