The divine energy creates life in all its forms; nothing is to be excluded in this manifestation. Man is included in this endless bustling where he believes he is playing a predominant role. He is subjected to the same laws, which escape him completely. He believes he is the master, which he is not; the forces of nature are there to remind him of that.

"The movement of life is permanent; man could not stand perceiving the full scope of its expression in him and around him where the vibratory movement animates all forms created. This vibration is the very powerful engine of creation, with a scope he cannot imagine, as he is limited to his small person all of whose wheels are not known to him. He believes he knows himself, he has that innocence. He sometimes happens to call upon 'specialists' to help him understand himself even better, but they, what do they know?

"The mystery of a being is obvious and no one holds the key to it. Too many phenomena are strange to him. Humanity is advancing in ignorance, on bases that currently cannot be changed. Another dimension of consciousness would provide him a sound approach to the truth about himself, and the context in which he is moving. This time will come. The birth of a new world is programmed; it will raise considerably the vibratory level of this world. All forms of life will profit from it; it is in the nature of things. Creation is a unified whole, and subjected to the same laws, even if the diversity of its manifestations can make one think the opposite. The divine power is unequalled; misunderstood by men, it nevertheless subjects them to its rules. No one can escape it."
