

Friday, November 5, 2004 - 10:00 AM

Human beings are incorrigible: even within a spiritual movement like ours, passions are kindled, dissensions appear, even within the framework of a seminar where only the impulses of the heart should prevail. Are the interested parties released from their resentments? It does not seem so and the atmosphere of this meeting will remain for them sullied by them.

"We cannot unfortunately iron out all these differences on the human level; they create frictions characteristic of humanity in its current level of evolution. The time when only the beauty of the soul will prevail has not yet come; the work carried out in our way contributes significantly to it.

"Let us be trustful in the divine intentions, even if the scene of the current world is not delightful. All depends on those levels to which man has currently no access: where reside the very elaborate plans of the whole creation. Those levels are subjected to strict laws unlikely to turn away from their achievement. Our brothers should continue as peacefully as possible; their practice makes them progress and that is all that matters. The benefits of a seminar should not be sullied by tendencies expressed by some brothers; Master's work, very fortunately, remains predominant.

"Be that as it may, our aspirants are advancing on the way to wisdom, even if there is yet a lot to do. We cannot so easily change the beings in their behaviours; the essentials lie elsewhere, in what is distilled in the soul of each one of them. God is Great."

Babuji