Saturday, March 13, 1999 - 5:00 p.m.

Thank your children-in-heart, who become also mine.

"They have done a good job. Life will not always be easy for them, but it is all set; they accepted it like that. They will be at the right place when needed. They should advance in purity and surrender. We will tell you more about them later.

"You met in other lives, hence your current relation. Shower them with love; they will return it to you. Remain in contact until the end. You will guide them after your departure. Transmit all this to them with my blessings."

Babuji

(5:30 p.m.
For centuries in Western India, the Bauls community has lead a life of troubadours, beseeching divine intervention through music.
Praised by Rabindranath Tagore, the great Indian poet, these mystics are neither Moslem nor Buddhist. They say: "the road to the Absolute is blocked by temples, mosques [and the teachers]." Their devotion is moving, and their gatherings are impressive. I understood after having seen this report on television, why Babuji urged me to watch it immediately after our contact, though my state of mind did not lend itself to it. That partakes absolutely of this great universal movement, beyond religions, which he announces to us for future times.)