Thursday, May 27, 1999 - 8:00 a.m.

All could be beautiful on the Earth, if peace reigned among men. The strongest should help the weakest. May hatred, desire, vice and other dark aspects disappear. It would be such an Eden, but it would not be the Earth any more!

"This is how humanity is at its current stage of evolution. In this garden, weeds should be removed all the time. So, look at these beautiful species with delight, these splendid flowers whose beauty touches you. These specimens manage to grow, to embellish and transform the entire space.

"Certain beings are like that. They advance in life without seeing too much what surrounds them; they are not affected by the ugliness of the world. They see only the beautiful in each one, as brother Francis of Assisi used to do. These are beings whose purity places them above the ugliness of life.

"The ideal would be to arrive at this state of holiness. It is necessary to start, even at a smaller scale, by looking towards the unique benefactor of the world who expects of us only perfection and love. Try! Perhaps some little effort will bring you successes, which will encourage you to persevere. Why wouldn't you reach, with time, this blessed state which would make of you a kind of saint? Nothing is impossible to a man of goodwill. We advise you to try the experience. These small individual actions can bring about great changes on the Earth. Never stop thinking that it might become one day a big garden full of flowers where it would be good to live."

Babuji