As long as there will be men on the Earth, we will have inspirational topics. As far as we are concerned, don't fear anything. We still have things to say, as long as you will be able to write them down.

"We often appear to talk to a brick wall, but it happens that certain formulas strike people's minds, hence the necessary repetition of the words and the subjects being treated from different perspectives to draw your attention. What do these messages amount to? We cannot reveal to you the secrets of the universe. We cannot give you 'scoops' which, you, Earthmen, are so fond of. Therefore, it is necessary to confine oneself to what occurs here, inside you and around you. Your reactions towards others, the big issue is there: the human relation, the frictions it generates and the incomprehension it creates. 'The nest of vipers' lies at this level. Even among 'advanced' beings, conflicts of cohabitation and communication exist. Man struggles between his gregarious instinct and his frenzied individualism. If he sometimes happens to endure his fellow men, he cannot help, from time to time—as is the case with cats that aptly hit their neighbour with their paw—criticizing them, and even slandering them. We are here in a normal human context, shall we say.

"We will avoid dwelling on the atrocities committed in the name of freedom, order and other reasons. There, we move from comedy to tragedy. If you had, like us, an overall picture of these horrors, you would not instantly be able to get over it. The horror films, which some of you delight in, are the reflection of reality. This Earth is a breeding ground where the best and the worst are side by side. Thank God for being on the good side, for the moment."
